

Darrell “The Mongoose” Montague Wants More Than Just a Championship Belt

Every aspiring MMA fighter wants to climb the ranks and stay on top long enough to be remembered for their championship legacy. Darrell “The Mongoose” Montague wants this and more, “I want to test my skills against the best. I don’t want to just be considered one of the best; I also want to give back.”

Montague understands the tough parts of growing up with a single parent and the every day temptations that are out there for kids, “I want to help my community. I want success for my family, so that kids like me, who come from my background can see that they too can achieve success.” With a humble mindset Montague elaborates, “I was saved by the gym, but it is not that easy. Some dues are too expensive. I hope with fighting success I can change that and help the less fortunate kids out like myself.”

Montague jokingly talked about wanting a nice car with his financial success, but the top ranked flyweight offered his true goals of becoming a championships UFC fighter, “I already have a strong work ethic, I believe this helped me get to where I am at, I want to pass this knowledge on and teach and train kids to find the success they need to achieve their dreams.”

While the future path is bright with gold belts and cheering crowds, Montague continues to emphasize the plan for his entire legacy, “MMA really did save my life. My hometown, my community, they all mean so much to me. I want to offer something; I would love to open a facility for kids in the future. I hope with hard work and success I can do that and hopefully pass on the competitive spirit to some one else who is young and hungry.”